WHY NOT VANCOUVER ISLAND?

(CONTRIBUTED.)

Some of my friends have been asking me recently about British Columbia as a place to go to on leave; and to help them and amuse myself I have put my views down on paper in the hope that they may be useful.

There must be people on the China coast who want a thorough change, and having exhausted the local attractions would like to try something new.

I believe that the man who has never stayed there is as a rule pretty vague about the Pacific coast of Canada. Many people think that living must be very expensive; others tell you that their wives are not strong enough for the rough life. Others, again, have heard of the plague of flies and mosquitoes.

The Daily Press was good enough to print some notes of mine last year on Vancouver Island from the point of view of the fisherman. I think that, perhaps, something of the same kind but addressed to the man who does not fish might be useful to local residents.

I will speak only of the Island because I know it so much better than it has become something of a passion with me. The mainland has, of course, its admirers. You can get mountain, lake and river pretty well all over British Columbia. But people in the country are, as a rule, very helpful and friendly, and you can find out about any given neighbourhood when you get over there. I will therefore confine myself to the district which I know and love and where I have at two widely distant dates had a most perfect holiday.

The Pacific in summer is nothing very alarming. The run from Yokohama across is a trifle monotonous; but the larger Empress boats take you in 18 days or less from Hongkong to Victoria.

"The Island" is about two-thirds the size of Ireland. It is still pretty heavily wooded, especially on the mountains. The climate of the southern half—the northern is as yet but little opened up—is very much that of North Devon. The summers are dry and hot; so much so that in and round Victoria in July and August people say you can sleep outside. Further north—at Alberni, for instance—there is more moisture. But on the whole, from about June 1st to the end of August, you may count on being in the open air six days at least out of seven. On my two trips—say, five months in all—I can remember no serious down-pour, though there were occasionally heavy showers.

Victoria is at its best about the end of April. Then the lilac, laburnum, horse chestnut, and pink and white May, are in full bloom. It continues delightful until about the end of October, when the rains begin.

First of all, as to accommodation. The Canadian Pacific Railway Hotel is the Bitz of Victoria. I have had a supper in the grill-room there which could not be beaten in London or Paris. It is a magnificent building upon a fine site in the very centre of the town. There are, of course, plenty of smaller hotels where they make you very comfortable. The Dallas, for instance, is a quiet place which stands opposite the landing wharf, and has a fine view of the glaciers of the Olympic range.

For a family man I should recommend the Oak Bay Hotel, situated in the district of that name and quite close to the golf course, and the sea. The electric tram takes you out in about half an hour.

A very fascinating place is the hotel—I forget its name, but there is only one—at Brentwood, about an hour by night railway from Victoria. It stands in the woods on the shore of a beautiful inlet. You can sail, row, fish in the sea, and bathe—and live in great comfort at a reasonable rate.

On the E. and N. Railway, again, are plenty of little settlements among lakes and woods. Such are Quamichan Lake; Duncan's (Tszouhalem Hotel); Cowichan Bay (good sailing and bathing and a very fair golf course); and Cowichan Lake (Riverside Hotel).

About six hours up the line is Qualicum Beach. I have never stayed there myself, but the hotel is a very fine modern building. You can get golf (rather rough), and boating and fishing. But the special attraction is the beach, which has beautiful sands, while the water is warm enough for children to bathe regularly.

MACAO NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MACAO, December 5th.

A very destructive fire occurred a week ago at the Tarrafeiro when no less than 30 houses were destroyed. There was a very strong wind at the time. The destroyed properties are said to have been heavily insured, chiefly with Chinese companies. Another fire broke out at Lappa last evening at about 11 o'clock, and many houses, matcheds, junks and small boats were destroyed. The amount of damage must have been very heavy, as there was a large number of junks either under repair or under construction.

The death took place on Sunday last of the Rev. Father Theodosio F. Xavier, who had been a teacher at the Central Schools of the Senado for 18 years. The Father was highly popular and there was a very large attendance of mourners at the funeral. The Municipal Band headed the procession and played the funeral march. The boys and girls of all the Senado's school and of St. Joseph's College, were present.

About 200 children attended their first communion last Sunday at the Cathedral. After the service there was a reception at the Bishop's palace, where tea was served and everyone received a souvenir of the occasion.

In all these places prices vary with the season. You should demand weekly or monthly rates, and for a family party your average daily bill in a country hotel should not much exceed 10/- per head.

The main roads are famous for their excellence, especially the Island Highway, and you can motor at reasonable rates. One very fine run is from Victoria to Alberni (150 miles). To thoroughly appreciate the scenery it is as well to break the journey and stay over one night—say, at Duncan's. At Alberni put up at the Sonness Hotel.

Port Alberni—As to climate: the sun in July and August is distinctly hotter than in England, but the temperature drops at sundown and the nights are cool and fresh. Old residents say that you want a light overcoat after dark all the year round. Even on the hottest day you can at most places on the coast look out upon a distant glacier all through the summer. As for flies and mosquitoes, you never see them in and round Victoria, or, I think, in the settlements anywhere. If Great Central Lake, you want mosquito curtains and should take a bottle of muscadine. As for roughing it in a country hotel you may have to clean your own boots, therefore take brown ones or canvas shoes.

Afternoon tea is usually an extra; in the smaller hotels you may have to make it yourself or take it in a thermos flask, as the staff expects to stand easy in the afternoon.

It is not always possible to get good washing outside the towns; but in the country no one dresses for dinner. Take lots of flannel shirts and old tweeds.

This is not a fishing article but I may mention that salmon and grise are running intermittently on the coast during the most of the year. When the run is on you can troll from a boat with a spoon bait or a sprat and be certain of getting fish almost anywhere in salt water. A friend of mine just back in Hongkong from Brentwood tells me that on one day—his best—in August last he and a friend got in four hours 18 grise and 2 salmon on the troll. The fish are handsome and well shaped, very game, and excellent eating.

The wild life is quite interesting. Deer are plentiful, and with a little luck you may see a brown bear. There are no dangerous animals, and the very snakes—which are fairly plentiful—are small and non-venomous. In the autumn there is quite fair rough shooting—pheasants, grouse, and wild fowl. The woods are full of wild strawberries, raspberries of various kinds, and whortle berries, and there is a pleasing succession of wild flowers throughout the summer.

I have not indicated any preference of my own for any particular spot because, after all, what attracts one man may repel another. The best plan is to move round and choose a place for yourself.

If your time is limited make a start at Oak Bay. There you are in the country, and can yet explore Victoria, a beautiful and well laid out town, where there are at present no slums.

Go to the Natural History museum, which has excellent specimens of North American birds, beasts, and fishes. Take your wife and or children to the great Ferry for an afternoon Sunday. If the weather is varia try Brentwood next. If it remains warm go to Port Alberni either by road or rail. The scenery on the way is too good to miss. You might profitably break the journey at Cameron Lake.

I have forgotten to say that Victoria has an excellent Club where visitors are made welcome. If your wife joins the Ladies' Club as a visiting member she can give you lunch or tea there.

Lastly, if you feel young enough, it is very good fun to go camping. You can hire a tent, or rent a log cabin on a lake or the sea shore, at a nominal rate. There is no trouble about fuel, and fish can generally be extracted from either fresh or salt water by the most primitive methods.

If all you ask of your holiday is the simple life in a bracing climate, with plenty of sun, and the open air all the week round, you can have it in the Island and, as it seems to me, at a very moderate cost.

AMALGAMATION?
NEW THEORIES.

LEAVE WELL ALONE.

(BY "THE TIMES" MILITARY CORRESPONDENT.)

The distinguished Frenchman who writes under the pseudonym of "Polybe" in the columns of the Figaro opened up a few days ago a subject which has given rise to a good deal of private and unofficial discussion in France, namely, the amalgamation of the Allied Armies.

Different people mean different things when they speak of the amalgamation of Armies. For some folk—and not the least important—ideas do not go further than an exchange of certain staff and technical officers, in order to enable certain Armies which are, or are assumed to be, deficient in certain respects, to profit by the experience of others which in those particular respects have made, or are assumed to have made, more progress. Other people go much further and desire to see Army Corps composed, for example, of one British and one French division, or of two divisions of one nation and one of another, the command of the Army Corps in the latter case developing upon the Army most strongly represented. Others, again, would retain the national Army Corps organization and would compose the Armies of so many Army Corps of each nationality. There is a variety of solutions, but each aims at a blend of one sort or another of the various national elements and the constitution of an amalgamated Army.

FREE TRADE IN IDEAS.

Let us begin by admitting that, whatever may happen to Free Trade after the war, there is free trade in ideas now. We are all either inventing or assimilating something fresh every day, and anyone who has a good idea has a capital market. Red tape and routine have been thrown into the box of forgetfulness; precedents are only honoured if they serve our particular ends, and everything of the are military is judged on its merits and according to its applicability or the reverse to our times. Likes and dislikes, prejudices and preferences are all scattered to the wind, and the only thing that counts with us when we examine a new idea is whether it will help us to win the war, and to win it sooner.

As "Polybe" truly says, amalgamation is nothing new to us. Italians, Germans, Prussians, Dutchmen, and other peoples fought under Napoleon's eagles. Our Armies in the East have usually been composite in character. The brigading of Portuguese with British troops produced the happiest results in the Peninsula, and we can scarcely name one of our modern campaigns in which two or more different races have not entered into the composition of our Armies, and often with excellent results. We have certainly shown, by our practice, that we have no inborn antipathy to the ideas which "Polybe" presents to us. We can admit, that from a tactical point of view the presence in each grand division of troops of British and French soldiers might prove extremely comforting to a commander on some occasions.

COMMAND AND COMMUNICATIONS.

So far we can most of us go in agreement, but when we turn over and examine these projects in their practical application we see real difficulties at all events in the initiation of the more radical of these proposals. If we assume that the amalgamation in the West has been complete, the French will have the more brilliant share in the commands, while, presuming that our Armies continue to grow, the time may come when the lion's share will pass to us. Even French logic might not allow our neighbours to accept the defence of France by British generals with unanimous enthusiasm. Incidentally also, the British G.H.Q. in the first case, and the French G.H.Q. in the second, would have to retire into private life.

But this is, let us say, a sentimental objection. The practical objection is much more serious. Every one acquainted with the character of modern lines of communication, and with the medical, supply, ordnance, remount, and scores of other services which form part of them, must surely allow that to organize the upkeep of scattered divisions by roads and railways crossing the main lines of communications of the French would be intolerably difficult and contrary to all sound principles of administration in the field.

Communications apart, would the command and the discipline of an amalgamated Anglo-French force be such an easy matter, and would not our present excellent relations suffer in case things did not go well in the field? One real source of trouble is the fact that so few of our leading statesmen and soldiers in England and France understand each other's language. We have systems of Staff work which are not identical. We do not fight our battles precisely in the same way. One measures in miles and pounds, and the other in kilometres and kilograms. We should probably need two sets of aviators, and many other duplicated arrangements, and, in short, each of us fights, marches, and billets after his manner. Conceive a British General in command of an amalgam during the bad days early in the war, or a French General in command of our people during the same stormy period. Would our good relations have survived the strain, and to whom would it have fallen to disponner an unsuccessful chief? It would have been a field fruitful in differences, and it is much to suppose that tactical advantages would have been adequate compensation.

NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Moreover, another solid difficulty exists in the fact that each one of us, whether we admit it openly or not, considers rightly or wrongly that we are finer fellows than anybody else. We British think that we possess in our English, Scottish, Irish, and Welsh regiments, in our county regiments on the one side and in our town-made units on the other, not to speak of the special characteristics of our Dominion troops, all the qualifications for undertaking every kind of operation, whether of defence or attack, on the earth and above it and below it. On the French side it is probably the same, for though we British always gave the French credit for extraordinary dash and brilliancy in the attack—and as we had fought some 22 wars with them, we were quite good judges—we never thoroughly grasped till this war the marvellous tenacity of our neighbours in the defence and the steadiness of France under a supreme trial. We are each of us, in our own opinions at least, possessed of the necessary qualities in our own people for waging war, and secretly we both believe that no one can stand up against us. Should we then really profit by amalgamation? Who shall say?

THE EXCHANGE OF OFFICERS.

The more moderate view of amalgamation which only aims at the strengthening of operations, staffs, and artillery by the interchange of good professional officers has a great deal more to be said for it, and there are many who would willingly accept the principle. But do the French need British staff officers to help them draft operation orders, or British gunners to teach them how to shoot? Who can affirm it? If they do not, then it is the British staff and artillery that are wasting cash, and hence once more we are up against the insular prejudice of the British which induces him to believe that he is better than anybody else, or that if he is not he soon will be.

We have been for more than two years in the field in a hard school, and our staffs and artillery have learnt a lot. There is scarcely a complaint to be made of the staff work now, and the German wails about our artillery, which recur in General von Armin's remarkable examination of conscience, are sufficient tribute to it. We have picked things up, and if only the Germans will be obliging enough to hold out for another year or two they will have made our armies in all respects second to none. Naturally, our field-gunners are more proficient than the heaviest, because the latter, on their present scale, are comparatively an innovation; but they, too, will come along when they have had enough practice in corpo vile, and it is no good pretending that they hanker to be coached, except by officers of the Royal Regiment. If imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, then we have flattered our gallant Allies by copying them in many things. They, too, have come to our bombing schools, and have adapted from us many improvements. This seems the best way for us both to advance harmoniously together along the path of progress, and it has the advantage of retaining for each Army the special characteristics which belong to it, and have distinguished it throughout the ages. Both armies are now hard as nails. Amalgam is a word which, traced to its origin, means something soft, and the origin is Greek and everything Greek is out of favour just now.

Surely, our two armies would do best to remain as they are, even with the defects inherent in our special qualities. We both take from the other, and, on the whole, we shall both do best to rub along as we are, remembering the wise proverb that the best is the enemy of good.

MACKENSEN'S ASSISTANT.

The latest German military hero is a certain General Tappen, who was mentioned a few days ago in a German official report as Mackensen's Chief of the General Staff in the Dobrudja. Like the now famous Ludendorff, Tappen was before the war an unknown lieutenant-colonel attached to the Great General Staff. He joined the General Staff in the field, and in June, 1915, was promoted to the rank of major-general as a reward for his services in Galicia. The semi-official papers are now freely advertising General Tappen, and declaring that his name "will shine brilliantly when the history is written of the battles on the east of the Black Sea."

SEQUEL TO SHIP'S FIRE. INQUIRY INTO "POLAVEN" OUTBREAK.

The inquiry was resumed at the Hongkong Marine Court yesterday into the cause of the fire which occurred on the s.s. Polaven when at Kowloon docks on November 2nd.

The Court was composed of Commander Beckwith, R.N., Commander Gibson, R.N., Capt. Walker (s.s. Kiangtung) and Mr. Macdonald (Government Marine Surveyor).

At the outset Mr. Looker (for the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Company) said he had gone into the evidence, and from what he had discovered it seemed to him that amongst the members of the Court should be someone of engineering experience. Therefore, he was going to suggest that the Court should adjourn to enable somebody connected with engineering to be appointed to the Court.

Comm. Beckwith said he anticipated such an application, and the Government Marine Surveyor had been appointed by the Government to form one of the Court.

Mr. H. J. Heck, answering Mr. F. C. Jenkin (representing the Asiatic Petroleum Company, owners of the vessel), said he was 4th engineer on the Polaven, and was on board when the fire occurred. This was when the vessel was alongside the wharf of the Kowloon docks. Witness had been employed on the Polaven for thirteen months, and therefore knew the geography of the engine-room. At the time the ship, as far as he knew, was in the hands of the dock company for repairs. There were Chinese workmen, and they were under the supervision of Mr. Forayth, of the dock company. On November 2nd he reached the Polaven about 7.30 a.m., and, changing into a boiler suit, went down to the engine-room, where he saw some Chinese workmen employed on the fan engines and the cylinders. The men engaged on the engine fans were working by candle light. Whilst in the engine-room, and he was there for a quarter of an hour, he saw no signs of fire. Subsequently an Eurasian watchman, in the employ of the dock company came to him and made a report to the effect that there was a fire in the engine-room of the vessel. As a result of this report he went to the door of the steering-room, from where he could see into the engine-room. He saw flames in the region of the fan casings, the flames being fairly fierce. He saw no fire anywhere else; neither did he see any workmen. Witness despatched the watchman for Mr. Neave, the superintendent of the dock company. The store-room, added witness, contained from five to six cases of oil, or about 300 gallons. From the position he was in he would have been able to have seen a fire in the store-room if it were in the lower area, but he did not see any flames. The dimensions of the fire were about two or three feet around the shaft; there was very little smoke.

Answering Mr. Looker, witness said he need not have seen any Chinese leaving the engine-room when he was looking at the fire; they could have got out by way of the stokehold in a few seconds, without being "nippy." Witness passed the fan when he went down into the engine-room, and there were then two or three workmen engaged on it. He was quite sure there was no electric light bulb immediately over the fan. There was no electric light in the engine-room, but it was on the port side. This light may have been shifted to the vicinity of the fans, but if it was there it was not illuminated. Witness said he used to carry a candle about in the engine-room; it was the usual thing to do. He did not inform anyone connected with the dock company that there was oil in the store-room. Above the store-room was a coal-bunker containing about 500 tons of coal, which he thought was Welsh coal, and was, he thought, taken in at Malta under two months previous to the outbreak of the fire. It was probable that there was coal in the bunker previous to the Malta supply being added. In addition to the 300 gallons of oil, they also had some kerosene, having taken in 30 gallons at Perim. There was about three feet between the top of the store-room and the bottom of the coal-bunker. There was also a supply of new cotton waste in a tank in the store-room.

Replying to Commander Beckwith, witness said that after he had gone to look for Mr. Neave he went towards the engine-room, but was unable to go down owing to the smoke and flames. Water was first played on the flames three-quarters of an hour after he had given the alarm. He could not say whether there were any dock hoses on the wharf; he supposed there were. Nothing was done to the ventilators before the arrival of the late Captain of the Polaven.

At this point Mr. Looker entered a protest. He said that in view of the questions he must remind the Court that its sole function was to inquire into the cause and origin of the fire. He was not prepared with any evidence with regard to the steps taken, and he objected to the Court entering with any determination as to what steps were or were not taken to put out the fire. That was outside the scope of the inquiry, and he would ask for a formal decision on the point if it were necessary, before he went further. It was not an ordinary fire on a ship at sea, and inasmuch as the cause might hereafter be decided by a jury he thought it was improper for that Court—and he used the word improper in the strongest terms to question on those lines.

Comm. Beckwith—Then I fail to see what the Court is here for unless we are to find out the cause of the fire.

Mr. Looker—You are here to inquire into the cause and origin of the fire, and you are not to attempt to go further. I think it is outside the power and function of the Court to determine a question affecting other people's rights, however useful they might think it. This Court is bound by its function, and that sole function is to inquire into the cause and origin of the fire.

Frank W. Richardson, an apprentice in the Kowloon Dock Company, said he was given the job to take away gear which might be stolen from the Polaven. He was assisted by another person named Coolho. A fortnight before the fire he went into the engine-room of the vessel, having a candle as illuminant. The store-room door, he noticed, was open. He saw a tank three-quarters full of cotton waste; mixed waste, new and old. Near the tank was a bench which was filthy and greasy. A week later he was again in the engine-room, and the contents of the room were the same as before.

By Mr. Jenkin—He did not think candles were dangerous in an engine-room if they were properly and carefully used. He thought it was an extraordinary thing to have a fire on the boat. He had not formed any opinion about the cause; it may have been due to carelessness.

Alfred Tucker, head watchman at the docks, said that when the alarm was raised he turned out the coolies with the fire hose, and ran towards the ship. A lot of smoke was coming from the engine-room, but he could not locate the fire. There had been watchmen on board and in the engine-room.

A Chinese fitter, who was on board the boat, with two other Chinese, for the purpose of disconnecting the fan-engine, denied that candles were used for this purpose.

Replying to Mr. Jenkin, this witness said he did not know if there were a lot of candle ends in the engine-room.

Another Chinese who was working on board, said that when the fire broke out he heard a loud explosion, like a bomb, proceed from the store-room. Smoke came out thickly from the engine-room directly after the explosion.

Mr. Looker remarked that the inquiry was for ascertaining the cause of the fire, and it could not possibly be conducive to that object to discover whether or not a man came up before or after the fire. His friend's sole object seemed to be to saddle him (Mr. Looker) with the responsibility for the fire.

Mr. Jenkin—Yes, and my friend's object is to keep it from us by putting men up to tell lies about fetching spanners and so forth.

A third fitter spoke to hearing a "noise like a bomb" proceed from the store-room, when he was engaged on the fan-engine. Flames, the height of a man, came from the store-room, and some of the flames "fell on top of him"; in the shape of pieces of wood. The wood fell from the store-room, and was freshly lit, and there was also a strong smell of kerosene. The fire, he added, was a very fierce one.

The hearing was adjourned until Friday at 10.30 a.m.

SMALL-POX IN HONGKONG. FORTY-FOUR DISEASED PEOPLE DUMPED IN THE STREETS.

There were five cases before Mr. C. D. Melbourne, at the Hongkong Magistracy yesterday, in which Chinese were charged with concealing people suffering from small-pox.

Mr. D. W. Tratman (Head of the Sanitary Department) appeared to prosecute, and all the defendants pleaded ignorance of the law.

Dr. McKenny spoke to making the certificates in each case, showing that the people found were suffering from small-pox.

Inspector Taylor, of the Sanitary Department, said the infected subjects were children in every case except one, this being a married woman.

Dr. Woodman, speaking as to the prevalence of small-pox in the western district, said that during the last month there had been 93 cases of small-pox, of which 44 were found dumped in the street and 23 more were only reported after death. Sixty-five of these cases came from the area in which the defendants lived.

Defendants all denied knowledge of the fact that they had to report the cases, some saying they had only been in the Colony for a short time.

Mr. Tratman said the evidence of Dr. Woodman showed that the cases were about as bad as they could possibly be. There were a great number of dumped cases, and it was impossible to cope with an epidemic if it were kept secret in this fashion. Had it not been for more or less accidental visits, all these cases would have still been spreading infection.

The fifth defendant, who was apparently a wealthy man, was fined $50—the maximum penalty—and the others were fined $25 each.

HONGKONG MAGISTRACY.

THEFT OF A BASKET.

Sentence of six weeks' hard labour was passed upon a Chinese charged with the theft of a basket which contained $27 and some clothing. The basket belonged to a man who was about to leave for Canton.

IRON.

Two Chinese were charged with being in unlawful possession of a quantity of pig-iron. One of the men was discharged, and the other was fined $10, with the alternative of fourteen days' imprisonment.

BANISHEE'S PEPPER.

A Chinese was charged before Mr. C. D. Melbourne, with possessing pepper for an unlawful purpose, he being found in Robinson Road. On this charge he was discharged, but as it was proved that the man had been previously banished and for returning he was sentenced to twelve months' hard labour and four hours' stocks.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We have received, for favour of publication, a letter signed "A Loyal Portuguese," protesting against some comments passed by one of our correspondents upon the decision of the Portuguese Government to establish a Portuguese school in Hongkong. We would point out to our correspondent that his protest ought properly to be addressed to the paper to whose comments he takes exception. By following that rule he will be able to reach precisely the same community that read those comments. We mention this because the practice appears to be very general in Hongkong of using the columns of one newspaper to attack opinions expressed in another. The idea prevails, apparently, that the editors of the papers here are not fair-minded enough to publish criticisms of the views expressed in their journals either by themselves or their correspondents. On behalf of the Press we resent this aspersion. Readers' opinions are always welcomed so long as they are free from abuse.—Ed. H.D.P.]

VALUABLE INACCURACY.

Pat was a witty young recruit, who was taking instruction in marksmanship. The squad had finished firing. Pat was brought to task for his poor shooting, and told that he must do better at the next distance; there were to be seven rounds of quick firing.

"Now, Pat," the sergeant told him, "fire at target No. 3." Pat banged away, and hit target No. 4 seven times in succession.

"What target did you aim at?" asked the irate officer.

"No. 3, sir," answered Pat.

"And you have hit No. 4 every time."

"Bedad, sir," retorted Pat, "that would be a grand thing in war. Sure, I might aim at a private and hit a gin'ral!"

2ND DIVISION.

33rd COY. R.G.A. v. STAFF AND DEPARTMENTS.

The gunners were distinctly unlucky to lose this match, which took place on the Navy Ground, yesterday, but their "goalie" let them down very badly. The Staff were set to face a rather strong sun, and went straight down to their objective from the kick-off, but May put the ball behind. The 33rd Coy. quickly brought it to the other end, from the goal kick, and Pritchard was called upon to save, which he did, by kicking clear. Steele tried a shot for the Staff but Rosister saved, and the gunners got to the other end in fine style, where Clutterbuck had hard lines, just heading the ball over. The Artillerymen were now pressing very hard, and had a couple of good chances to open the scoring, but while they were muddling in the goal mouth, Pritchard rose to the occasion and cleared well. Darricott opened the scoring for the Staff with a good shot, but one which the custodian should undoubtedly have saved. It appeared to be going straight towards him, when he lifted his leg and let it pass underneath. The second goal, which was also felled by Darricott, was an even more unsatisfactory one, the ball being shot weakly towards the side, where it appeared to curl round the post into goal, with Rosister standing watching it. There was no further scoring before the whistle sounded for the interval. The play was fast in the second half, the ball travelling from end to end very quickly. Darricott for the Staff, at centre forward, played a fine forcing game, and was ably assisted by Davies who made him some splendid openings for him. The only goal in this half went to the gunners, Small scoring with a very neat shot. Result—Staff and Departments 2, 33rd Coy. R.G.A. 1.

Referee—Mr. Wright.

HONGKONG 7TH DECEMBER, 1916.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS.

As far as it is possible to judge from the meagre information available, it appears very probable that the Cabinet crisis, culminating in the resignation of Mr. Lloyd George and then of Mr. Asquith, may be attributed in large measure to the highly unsatisfactory position of affairs prevailing in Roumania. The slow progress on the Somme and the recrudescence of the submarine campaign may also be contributory causes. There seems to be no doubt that the British people are discontented with the trend of military operations. They have willingly made every sacrifice which has been demanded of them during more than two years, and they have been buoyed up with the hope that at last the tide, which was running so strongly against them in the autumn of 1914, had turned, and that the Allies, on one front or the other, were within measurable distance of a decisive victory. Instead, there has been a position almost approaching stalemate in both the East and the West for some time past, and the climax has been reached in the failure to prevent the invasion of Roumania. There is no weakening in our resolve to win the war; our confidence in ultimate victory is unshaken and absolutely unshakable, but there has been a steadily growing feeling that the fullest and best use has not been made of all the immense resources at our command. Whether the Government, as a whole, or individual members of the Cabinet only, are to blame for this failure it is difficult to decide.

It has been argued—and not, perhaps, without some show of reason—that the present size of the War Council precludes the possibility of taking action with the rapidity which the circumstances demand. The divergence of opinions amongst the members inevitably and in compromise, and compromises at this juncture are anathema to the British public. At any rate, it appears that the formation of a smaller Council, with practically unlimited powers, is the particular rock upon which the Cabinet has split. Mr. Asquith, the cold, calculating unemotional statesman, in whom, we believe, the bulk of the people placed unbounded confidence, agreed to a reduction of the number, but insisted, as was natural, upon his right to act as Chairman. His chief opponent—Mr. Lloyd George—who is credited with having formulated a plan, which was discarded, for rendering assistance to Roumania—was determined that Mr. Asquith should have no place in the Council but should retain merely the right of veto upon its decisions—a nebulous kind of position carrying with it tremendous responsibility but very little real power. It is not surprising that this plan proved unacceptable to the Premier. Mr. Lloyd George consequently resigned. As he is the statesman who, rightly or wrongly, is credited with the power of "getting things done," and has a tremendous following in the country, the impossibility of leading the Government against his opposition was evidently recognised by Mr. Asquith, who almost immediately afterwards placed his resignation in the hands of the King.

Mr. ASQUITH, who is 64 years of age, has been a member of the House of Commons for thirty years. He was Home Secretary from 1892-5 in the Gladstone and Rosebery Administrations, Chancellor of the Exchequer from 1905-8 in Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's government, and has been Prime Minister continuously since 1908. He is generally regarded as an eminently "sound" man and one who is, above all else, loyal to his colleagues. Mr. Lloyd George has been a member of the House of Commons since 1890. In Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's Ministry he occupied the position of President of the Board of Trade. When Mr. Asquith was called upon to lead the Government, he accepted office as Chancellor of the Exchequer. This position he held at the outbreak of hostilities, and he won the admiration even of those who had formerly been most bitterly opposed to him by his masterly handling of the financial situation. Cutting himself adrift from all precedent, he enlisted the assistance of the business experts of the City in formulating measures to meet the new and unparalleled situation. When the new Ministry of Munitions was formed in May, 1915, following the disclosures regarding the shortage of high explosives, he was the man to whom the nation instinctively turned to direct its activities. Upon the death of Lord Kitchener, he succeeded to the control of the War Office. No one has had a more strenuous political career. A few years ago he was renowned for his vigorous denunciation of the monied classes and there was, perhaps, no one more bitterly excoriated by the aristocracy. He has thrown himself into war-work, however, with that energy which seems to be his outstanding characteristic, and while he has alienated some of his former political friends, he has secured the support of all those influential organs of public opinion which formerly condemned him in such unmeasured terms. Whatever the verdict of history may be upon his abilities as a statesman, there is no doubt that his magnetic personality and persuasive eloquence has enabled him to tower above his colleagues in public opinion in this great crisis.

Mr. BONAR LAW has been summoned by the King to reconstruct the Government, and it will probably be found that the new Cabinet will contain most of the Unionist leaders, together with Mr. Lloyd George, and possibly an additional representative of Labour. Sir EDWARD CARSON will almost certainly be given a portfolio. The chances of such a Government securing the confidence of the country will depend largely upon the course of military operations and upon the attitude adopted by Mr. Asquith and those who are said to support him, including Viscount GREY. If they should form themselves into an Opposition and become such unsparring critics of the Government's policy as Sir EDWARD CARSON has been since his resignation from the Coalition Cabinet, Mr. BONAR LAW's task will not be an enviable one. His only experience of office has been as Colonial Secretary since the formation of the Coalition Government. He first came into prominence as a Tariff Reformer and was chosen as leader of the Unionists after the resignation of Mr. Balfour, when it appeared possible that the rival claims of Mr. WATTS LANE and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN to the position would lead to the breaking up of the Party. Mr. BONAR LAW has been a successful business man, but he has yet to show himself the possessor of those qualifications which will enable him to succeed where Mr. Asquith is presumed to have failed.

A mail for Europe via Siberia closes to-day at 3 p.m.

The departure of the str. Venezuela has been postponed from Saturday, the 9th inst., until Monday, the 11th inst., at noon.

The Pacific Mail steamer Venezuela arrived in Hongkong from San Francisco yesterday on her maiden voyage to the East.

Mr. J. A. de Almeida acknowledges with thanks a sum of $32 on behalf of "Portuguese Red Cross Society" contributed by members of Catholic Union.

There will be no tennis at Mountain Lodge on Friday, on account of the Mission Service which is being held that day, but Lady May will be "At Home" as usual on the following Friday.

The Hon. Treasurer of the Alice Memorial and Affiliated Hospitals acknowledges with thanks the following donations to the funds of the Hospitals:—Sir Robert Ho Tung, $100; Ho Fook, $25.

Meetings in connection with the National Mission to be held to-day include service in the Cathedral at 10.15 a.m.; meeting for Women at Quarry Bay, at 3 p.m., and a meeting for men only in the City Hall at 6 p.m., when the subject will be "Why should men lead a moral life?"

An Extraordinary General meeting of the Green Island Cement Co., Ltd., will be held at the offices of Messrs. Shewan, Tomes & Co., the General Managers, on Friday, December 16th, at noon, in order to consider the advisability of reducing the capital of the Company from four million to three million dollars.

Dr. A. S. Gomes, K.O.S.G., says the Religio e Patria, has most generously presented a handsome gift of about $10,000 ($700 in Exchequer Bonds and 600 shares of the Tramway Company) to the Asilo de São Antonio, West Point, which he established in the beginning of this year in memory of his deceased wife, Mrs. Helena Brandao Gomes.

"Deferred" telegrams exchanged with the United Kingdom and North Europe via the Eastern service are still subject to heavy delay, but, repairs to one of the broken cables having been effected, such telegrams are now being disposed of by wire, as opportunity offers, instead of by post between Gibraltar and London, as previously notified.

Those who wish to attend the Gala Performance of "Kismet" on Friday, 15th inst., and who have not already secured seats, are advised to book without delay as there are only a few $10 dress circle seats left. There are still $5 seats to be had on the ground floor, which are excellently placed for witnessing a production of this kind.

The body of a Chinese chauffeur has been taken to the public mortuary. The deceased, who was in the employ of Mr. J. Walker, of the Dairy Farm Company, was attempting to turn the car—car a cowshed on Tuesday when the vehicle got off the road, and dashed down the hill-side, eventually stopping in a ravine about 100 yards below the road. The car was badly smashed and the driver was thrown out. When picked up later, it was found that the chauffeur was dead.

The leading Chinese in this Colony are getting up a series of Chinese theatrical performances at the Tai Ping Theatre to last four days and five nights, commencing from the evening of the 7th December, in aid of the War Charities Fund. A Committee, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Mr. Lau Chu-pak, is now busily engaged in making preparations. About 180 Chinese gentlemen have already given $50 each, while some of them have, in addition, taken special boxes costing from $200 to $500 each. In view of the object of this undertaking, it is believed that the European community may like to give the performance their patronage. Those desiring to secure seats are requested to communicate early with Mr. Ip Lan-chuen, Secretary of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, as most of the seats have been booked. The price of a reserved seat is $10.

BRITISH POLITICAL CRISIS.

SENSATIONAL NEWS.

LONDON, December 6th.

The resignation of Mr. Asquith, and the summoning of Mr. Bonar Law, has caused a sensation in the Clubs, though there is little disposition to criticise from a partisan standpoint. It is generally hoped that Mr. Bonar Law will be able to form a strong and united Government which will command the support of the majority in the House of Commons, regardless of pre-war ties.

It is understood that the Unionist Ministers, after consulting with Mr. Bonar Law, intimated to Mr. Asquith that the changes proposed in the War Council were not acceptable.

THE NEW CABINET.

It is too early to discuss the probable personnel of the Cabinet, which will be based on consultations between Mr. Bonar Law and his Unionist colleagues, but it is believed that Mr. Lloyd George is willing to serve, and other Liberals are regarded as likely office holders.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

There were many conferences of Ministers yesterday prior to the announcement of the resignations.

Mr. Bonar Law conferred with his Unionist colleagues, and Lord Curzon acted as messenger to the conference between Mr. Asquith and the Liberal Ministers, and stated the Unionists view of Mr. Lloyd George's resignation. They also told Mr. Asquith that they would resign unless the Government did so.

It is generally assumed that the new Government will be predominantly Unionist, though Mr. Bonar Law will attempt to keep the Coalition Government in existence. Mr. Herbert Samuel and the Hon. Mr. S. Montagu are the only Liberals mentioned as likely to join the new Government. The Daily News, indeed, declares that the new Government will contain no Liberal except Mr. Lloyd George, though the Liberals will support it patriotically.

The papers agree that whoever is Premier will find it difficult to command the majority in the House of Commons, not merely because of Mr. Asquith's hold on the latter, but also because of the acute antagonism of the labour members to Mr. Lloyd George.

TALK OF AN ELECTION.

The Unionist papers are confident that in the event of an election the new National Government will secure a great victory, but the general feeling is that an election is unthinkable during war. Moreover, most of the electorate is fighting while the women are voteless.

The Daily Chronicle states that should Mr. Bonar Law decline to form a Government, the King might summon Mr. Lloyd George, who would doubtless endeavour to form a composite Government, and attempt to secure Nationalist support. Should neither succeed, the King will probably invite Mr. Asquith to reconstitute the Coalition Government. The same paper says that there were speculations yesterday that the King might call the party leaders and invite them to adjust their differences.

The Daily Telegraph states that it recognises that much will depend on the attitude of Mr. Asquith, but that it is convinced that, with his high sense of duty, he will not refuse a subordinate position in the new Government.

EARLIER CABLES.

RESIGNATION OF MR. LLOYD GEORGE.

LONDON, December 6th.

Mr. Lloyd George has resigned. MR. ASQUITH RESIGNS.

LONDON, December 6th.

It is officially announced that Mr. Asquith has tendered his resignation.

LATER.

A Court Circular announces that the King has accepted Mr. Asquith's resignation.

MR. BONAR LAW.

LONDON, December 6th.

The King has summoned Mr. Bonar Law.

PRESS PORTENTS AND PROPHECIES.

LONDON, December 6th.

The Morning Post says that Mr. McKenna's departure from the Treasury is regarded as settled.

The Daily Graphic says Mr. Lloyd George desires changes in the Foreign Office, Woolpack, Treasury and Admiralty. It is probable that Mr. Lloyd George will leave the War Office, where he has not found scope for his energies, but a Lloyd George Government is still regarded as impossible. There is a consensus of opinion in the papers that Mr. Balfour will leave the Admiralty, though not immediately.

MANCHESTER LIBERALS SUPPORT MR. ASQUITH.

A meeting of Manchester Liberals passed a vote of confidence in Mr. Asquith.

A LABOURIST VIEW.

Mr. Thomas, M.P., speaking at Kenilworth, declared that the Ministerial strikers ought to be stopped. The workers of the country would not tolerate a dictatorship. A continuance of the present agitations would split the country, and the Labour Party would enter the conflict determined to see justice done to Mr. Asquith.

REAL CAUSE OF THE CRISIS.

A correspondent in the Star asserts that the real cause of the crisis is a conflict between the Western and Eastern schools of strategy. Mr. Lloyd George favouring the latter's demand for an offensive from Salonika.

OTHER VIEWS.

The Westminster Gazette announces that Mr. Asquith definitely declined the proposal to form a War Council of which he would not be a member. The next move remains with Mr. Lloyd George. It is understood that Viscount Grey and most of the principal members of the Cabinet support Mr. Asquith.

The late evening papers are filled with conflicting rumours. Some announce simultaneously Mr. Lloyd George's resignation and Mr. Asquith's refusal to stand outside the War Council, indicating that the first is a sequel to the second. Others hope that resignations will ultimately be avoided. Mr. Asquith is labouring to retain Mr. Lloyd George, and the situation is therefore liable to modification.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE'S DEMANDS.

The Westminster Gazette states that Mr. Lloyd George demands a smaller War Council with practically unlimited powers, the Premier to be excluded and only have the right to veto decisions. Mr. Asquith approved of a smaller War Council, but held that the Premier must be Chairman thereof. He would rather resign than submit to any other arrangement. Mr. Asquith's decision is final.

RUSSO-PERSIAN FRIENDSHIP.

PETROGRAD, December 6th.

The Grand Duke Boris has presented the Shah with a silver vase from the Czar. At a luncheon, the Shah and the Grand Duke exchanged assurances as to the consolidation of Russo-Persian friendship.

The Grand Duke was enthusiastically received by the inhabitants of Teheran.

EARLIER CABLES.

BELGIAN DEPORTATIONS.

SWITZERLAND'S ATTITUDE.

BERNE, December 6th.

The Federal Council has rejected resolutions passed by the Cantonal Councils protesting against the Franco-Belgian deportations, because they would involve an investigation which was not within Switzerland's province. The Council mentions that during the war the Central Powers had addressed 37, and the Entente 48 protests against violations of international law.

WHAT HOLLAND THINKS.

THE HAGUE, December 6th.

The Foreign Minister, replying to questions in the Chamber regarding Belgian deportations, said the Government had written the German Government expressing the view that the deportations were opposed to the principle and spirit of international law. The Government would have refrained from taking steps in the matter but for the responsibility attaching to the Government with regard to those Belgians who originally took refuge in Holland and later returned to Belgium trusting to guarantees that they would not be deported to Germany, expressly given by highest German authority at Antwerp. The Dutch Government expressed the hope that those deportees would be repatriated.

FOOD REGULATIONS.

BOARD OF TRADE ORDER.

LONDON, December 6th.

A Board of Trade Order limits meals in public places and boarding-houses to three courses in the evening and to two courses otherwise. Cheese is not reckoned without meat or fish. Hors d'oeuvre, soup and dessert are each reckoned as a half-course. A further Order is foreshadowed instituting meatless days universally.

ADMIRAL JELlicoe.

LONDON, December 6th.

The King has invested Admiral Jellicoe with the Order of Merit.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

LONDON, December 6th.

In the House of Commons Mr. Austen Chamberlain stated that he saw no sufficient reason for inviting the Raj to reconsider the pay of Divisional Commanders appointed since the war began.

Mr. Steele-Maitland stated that the procedure adopted in the case of Singho, Ceylon, would be adopted in any similar case which, in the Governor's opinion, required investigation. He saw no reason to modify the opinion that the appointment of a Commission from Britain to enquire into the Ceylon riots was unnecessary and undesirable.

VENEZELISTS BATTERED TO DEATH.

LONDON, December 6th.

Router learns that a telegram from the British Legation at Athens states that two Greek Red Cross nurses, after tending a wounded Legation porter for a whole day, were subsequently arrested, dragged before the head of the police and shut up for thirty hours without food and without water in a filthy latrine. There were also continuous attempts at raping, and their house was looted. They have now been released, and state that the police headquarters are filled with Venezelists, some of whom have been battered to death, while some have had their eyes gouged out. The late head of the Secret Police was tied to a post and beaten on the head with a club by an Orthodox priest.

WAR NEWS.

ILLUMINATING.

The Berliner Tageblatt, enumerating reasons for dismissing the Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg, gives as the fourth:—

"During the war Bethmann Hollweg has committed mistakes after mistake. He spoke of the immeasurably disastrous 'wrong' we had committed as regards the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, a word so untrue, so damaging to Germany, that it ought only to have come from the mouth of a lying enemy."

DANISH-GERMAN FRONTIER INCIDENT.

At the Danish-German frontier village of Farris, to the south of Vamdrup, recently, German sentries shot a Russian prisoner of war after he had escaped across the frontier and dragged the body back, threatening with their rifles the Danish farmers who protested. The affair has caused considerable indignation in the border districts.

Mr. Moos, one of the farmers present, says in a letter to the Kolding Avis, that the Government must protect the population if it does not provide them with arms. The Foreign Office will send a protest to Berlin as soon as the local authorities have reported on the incident.

BRITISH PRISONERS FOUND AT TABORA.

The Dispatch says that when the British forces entered Tabora, German East Africa, shortly after the Belgian occupation they found over 100 British prisoners of war, most of whom had been interned for two years.

Among them was Archdeacon Woodward, who has been associated with the East African missionary movement since 1874. He was seriously ill and was on the point of sailing for England when he was taken prisoner. Nothing had been heard of him for two years. There were several women among the prisoners. The conditions of the camp were appalling. European men and women were herded together with natives and the sanitary arrangements were unspeakable. Several prisoners died.—Reuter.

NATURALISED GERMAN AND THE ARMY.

The appointment of Mr. Felix Casel, K.C., as Judge Advocate-General of the British Army, was announced recently. A Home paper asserts that the matter will be raised in the House of Commons. The objection to the appointment, it is understood, is due to Mr. Casel's German birth.

He was naturalised on October 18th, 1892, when he was twenty-three years of age, his full names being given as Felix Maximilian Schoenbrunn Casel. German was given as his place of origin. Through his mother he is a nephew of the Right Hon. Sir Ernest Cassel, a native of Cologne, who was naturalised on September 3rd, 1878.

THE NATIONAL MISSION.

UNITED MEETING IN THE THEATRE ROYAL.

Last night a united meeting in connection with the National Mission of Repentance and Hope was held in the Theatre Royal, which was well filled. The Rev. T. Robinson, Wesleyan Church, Hongkong, presided and conducted the opening devotional exercises.

Bishop Norris delivered an address based on the words:—"I have loved you, saith the Lord," (Malachi i, 2). He said he had promised that his remarks would have a bearing on our personal responsibilities as English men and women—or Britishers, if they liked the name better—to their country. As a frame-work for his thoughts he gave a brief outline of the history leading up to the writing of the book of Malachi, up to the time when, in the year 444 B.C., they adopted, at the instigation of Ezra, a solemn League and Covenant, under four heads. The first had relation to the current practice at the time of the Jews intermarrying with wealthy foreigners; the second related to the keeping of the Sabbath; the third to the oppression of the poor; and the fourth to the freewill offerings for the cause and support of religion. The speaker took up each of these heads in turn and applied them to present day conditions.

Before the war broke out they in England had something that corresponded to the Jewish marriages with foreigners, and which was condemned by the prophets; they had come to disregard the Sabbath—the Sabbath—even as the Jews in their day desecrated their Sabbath; if they were not oppressing the poor directly they were dealing out injustice or allowing injustice to go on without interference; and they were all—he would not say robbing—starving their religion. They were beginning to lose any idea of what real generosity meant, beginning to lose any idea of what was their real duty as to giving for the upkeep of their religion. There were exceptions like torches in a dark night; but what he had said was the general truth, and the exceptions only proved it.

As to marriage with foreigners he had no wish to inveigh against English men and women marrying those of another nation. At the same time he was not at all sure if it was usually a happy thing for English men and women to marry a bride or husband belonging to another nation, any more than he was sure it was a happy thing, as a rule, for people belonging to different communions to intermarry. If they did so it was a venture, and nothing but the grace of God would make it satisfactory and happy. The preservation of the family life was what this item in the League and Covenant was directed to, and anything that tended to weaken family life was condemned as un-Christian and ought to be condemned by us. Her family life was one of the glories of England and he adjured them to maintain and protect it. He could not think there was a man amongst us not married (like himself) who was proud of it, or thankful for it. A man who was married had a finer motive in times of crisis than the man who was not, just as at the time of the Boxer rebellion and they were shut up in the British Legation at Peking, the man who had given him shelter had the safety of a recently married wife and an unborn child, while he (the Bishop) had other people's wives to look after. There was no comparison between them. If a man was going to marry let him marry at an age he ought to marry, and having married nothing should be allowed to interfere with their bringing up boys and girls to be the honour and support and glory and pride of this England of ours in the years to come. The married life must be one of give and take; a life in which each considered the other first. Above all else let them keep the home life of this country good and pure and strong.

As to keeping the Sabbath day. Because there was strong feeling and divergence of feeling on this subject was no reason why he should not speak on it. Some said they could not keep Sunday because they had to go to play golf that day. If a man took up that position well and good. All he would say to him was that he was not making the most of the opportunities God gave him. If he did, as a Christian man, honestly think he was not meant to join with his fellow-Christians in the worship of God on Sunday, he would let him go his way and play his golf without saying very much to him except to point out to him that he was doing an injury to the people who did go to church, because he and others who did not attend detracted from the cheerfulness and heartiness of the service. He noticed that in Hongkong they had a golfers' service in the Cathedral for half-an-hour every alternate Sunday. He was very glad their Chaplain said he could give it to them when they asked it, and glad that they asked it; but he would be very much surprised if they thought that was good enough for long; half-an-hour, every other Sunday of a shortened Matins instead of Holy Communion, a feast which our Lord himself ordained to commemorate the death by which we were redeemed. He had been consulted again and again by people who asked if they could do this, that and the other thing on Sunday, and he had one answer for them; that was: Are you quite clear what your duty on Sunday is? He had a clear idea of his position, and his first duty he considered was to go to church and join with other people in the worship of their common Father.

The Bishop afterwards dealt with the question of the starvation of religion, and said that he knew that in England they did not starve the Church, but that the clergy connected with it were notorious in England that could not be said. It was a shame, not to those who were starved, but to those who ought to see that they were not starved.

DESTROYERS AT JUTLAND.

PETS IN THE BATTLE.

THE MIND OF THE NAVY.

[BY RICHARD KIPLING.]

What mystery is there like the mystery of the other man's job—or what world so cut off as that which he enters when he goes to it? The eminent surgeon is altogether such a one as ourselves, even till his hand falls on the knob of the theatre-door. After that, in the silence among the ether fumes, no man except his acolytes, and they won't tell, has ever seen his face. So with the unconsidered curate. Yet, before the war, he had more experience of the business and detail of death than any of the people who contended him. His face also, as he stands his bedside watch—that countenance which he shall justify himself to his Maker—none have ever looked upon. Even the ditcher is a priest of mysteries at the high moment when he lays out in his mind levels and the fall of the water that he alone can draw off clearly. But catch any of these men five minutes after they have left their altars, and you will find the doors are shut.

Chance sent me almost immediately after the Jutland fight a lieutenant of one of the destroyers engaged. Among other things he told me if there was an articular noise.

"Well, I haven't been in the trenches,
of course," he replied, "but I don't think there could have been much more noise than there was."

This bears out a report of a destroyer who could not be certain whether an enemy battleship had blown up or not, saying that in that particular corner it would have been impossible to identify anything less than the explosion of a whole magazine.

"It wasn't exactly noise," he reflected.
"Noise is what you take in from outside.
This was inside you. It seemed to lift you right out of everything."

"And how did the light affect one?"
I asked, trying to work out a theory that noise and light produced beyond known endurance form an unknown aesthetic and stimulant, comparable to, but infinitely more potent than, the soothing effect of the smoke-pall of ancient battles.

"The lights were rather curious," was the answer. "I don't know that one noticed searchlights particularly, unless they were of an almost unparalleled size which had stuck in his memory. A soldier-man, related to one of the officers
in one of our ships that was put down,
had got five days' leave from the trenches,
which he spent with his relative aboard,
and thus dropped in for the whole performance. He had been employed in helping to spot, and had lived up a mast
till the ship sank, when he stepped off
into the water and swam about till he was fished out and put ashore. By that time, the tale goes, his engine room
painted knaki had shrunk halfway up his legs, and arms, in which costume, he reported himself to the War Office and pleaded for one little day's extension of leave to make himself decent. 'Not a bit of it,' said the War Office. 'If you choose to spend your leave playing with sailors and getting wet all over that's your concern. We will return to duty by
to-night's boat.' (This may be a libel on the W.O., but it sounds very like them.)

"And he had to go," said the boy, "but I expect he spent the next week at Headquarters telling generals all about the fight."

"And, of course, the Admiralty gave
you all lots of leave?"

"Us? Yes, heaps. We had nothing to except clean down and oil up and be ready to go to sea again in a few hours."

That little fact was brought out at the end of almost every destroyer's report.
"Having returned to base at such and such a time, I took in oil, etc., and reported ready for sea at—o'clock." When you think of the amount of work a ship needs even after peace manoeuvres, you can realize what had to be done on the heels of an action. And, as there is nothing like housework for the troubled soul of a woman, so a general clean-up is good for sailors. I had this from a petty officer who had also passed through deep waters. "If you've seen your best friend go from alongside you, and your own officer, and your own boat's crew with him, and things of that kind, a man's best comfort is small, variegated jobs, which he is damned for continuous."

THE SILENT SERVICE.
Presently my friend of the destroyer
went back to his stark, desolate life, where feelings do not count and the fact of his being cold, wet, searish, sleepless, or dog-tired had no bearing whatever on his business, which was to turn out at any hour in any weather and do or endure, decently according to ritual, what he was ordered to do. It is hard to reach the kernel of Navy minds. The unbridgeable seas and mechanisms they work on and through have given them the simplicity of elements and machines. The habit of dealing with swift accident; a life of closest and strictest association with their own caste as well as contact with all kinds of men all earth over have added an immense cunning to those qualities; and that they are from early youth cut out of all feelings that may come between them and their ends makes them more incomprehensible than Jesuits, even to their own people.
What, then, must they be to the enemy?

Here is a Service, which prowls forth and achieves, at the lowest, something of a victory. How far-reaching a one only the war's end will reveal. It returns in gloomy silence, broken by the occasional hoot of the longshore loafer, after issuing a bulletin, which, though it may enlighten the professional mind, does not exhilarate the layman. Meantime, the enemy triumphs, wirelessly, far and wide. A few frigid and perfunctory seeming contradictions are put forward against his resounding claims; a naval expert or two is heard talking "off";
the rest is silence. Anon, the enemy after a prodigious amount of explanation which not even the neutrals seem to take any interest in, revives his claims and, very modestly, enlarges his losses.
Still no sign. After weeks there appears a document giving our version of the affair, which is as colourless, detached,

"And the Hun's gunnery?"
That was various. Sometimes they began quite well, and went to pieces after they'd been strafed a little; but sometimes they picked up again. There was one Hun-boat that got no end of a hammering and it seemed to do her gunnery good.
She improved tremendously till we sank her. I expect we'd knocked out some scientific Hun in the controls and he'd been succeeded by a man who knew how.
It used to be "Fritz" last year when they spoke of the enemy. Now it is Hun, as I have heard, "Yahun," being a superlative of Yahoo. In the Napoleonic wars we called the Frenchmen too many names for any one of them to endure;
but this is the age of standardization.

"And what about our Lower Deck?"
I continued.
"They? Oh, they carried on as usual.
It takes a lot to impress the Lower Deck when they're busy." And he mentioned several little things that confirmed this.
They had a great deal to do, and they did it skilfully, because they had been trained to carry on under all conditions without panicking. What they did in the way of running repairs was even more wonderful, if that be possible, than their normal routine.

The Lower Deck nowadays is full of strange fish with unlooked-for accomplishments, as in the recorded case of two simple seamen of a destroyer, who, when need was sorest, came to the front as trained experts in first-aid.

"And now—what about the actual Hun losses at Jutland?" I ventured.
"You've seen the list, haven't you?"
"Yes, but it occurred to me—that they might have been a shade under-estimated,
and I thought perhaps—"

A perfectly plain asbestos fire-curtain descended in front of the already locked door. It was none of his business to dispute the drive. If there were any discrepancies between estimate and results,
one might be sure that the enemy knew about them, which was the chief thing that mattered.

It was, said he, Joss that the light was so bad at the hour of the last round-up, when our main fleet had come down from the north and shovelled the Hun round on his tracks. Per contra, had it been any other kind of weather the odds were the Hun would not have ventured so far.
As it was, the Hun's fleet had come out and gone back again, none the better for air and exercise. We must be thankful for what we had managed to pick up.

But, talking of picking up, there was an instance of almost unparalleled Joss
which had stuck in his memory. A soldier-man, related to one of the officers
in one of our ships that was put down,
had got five days' leave from the trenches,
which he spent with his relative aboard,
and thus dropped in for the whole performance. He had been employed in helping to spot, and had lived up a mast
till the ship sank, when he stepped off
into the water and swam about till he was fished out and put ashore. By that time, the tale goes, his engine room
painted knaki had shrunk halfway up his legs, and arms, in which costume, he reported himself to the War Office and
pleaded for one little day's extension of
leave to make himself decent. "Not a bit of it," said the War Office. "If you choose to spend your leave playing with
sailors and getting wet all over that's your concern. We will return to duty by
to-night's boat." (This may be a libel on
the W.O., but it sounds very like them.)

"And he had to go," said the boy, "but I expect he spent the next week at Headquarters telling generals all about the
fight."

"And, of course, the Admiralty gave
you all lots of leave?"

"Us? Yes, heaps. We had nothing to except clean down and oil up and be ready to go to sea again in a few hours."

That little fact was brought out at the end of almost every destroyer's report.

and scrupulously impartial as the findings of a Prize Court. It opines that the list of enemy losses which it submits gives the minimum in regard to numbers, thought it is possibly not entirely accurate in regard to the particular class of vessel, especially those that were sunk during the night attacks. Here the matter rests and remains—just like our blockade. There is an insolence about it all that makes one gasp.

THE CLOSING NOTE.
Yet that insolence springs naturally and unconsciously as an oath out of the same spirit that caused the destroyer to pick up the dog. The reports themselves, and tenfold more the stories not in the reports, are charged with it, but no words by any outsider can reproduce just that professional tone and touch. A man writing home after the fight points out that the great consolation for not having cleaned up the enemy altogether was that "anyhow these East Coast devils"—a fellow squadron, if you please, which up till Jutland had had most of the fighting —were not there. They missed that show. We were as cock-hoop as a girl had been to a dance that her sister has missed.

This was one of the figures in that dance:—
"A little British destroyer, her mid-ships rent by a great shell meant for a battle-cruiser; exuding steam from every pore; able to be ahead, but not to steer;
unable to get out of anybody's way,
likely to be rammed by any one of a dozen ships; her siren whimpering:—'Let me through! Make way!'; her crew fallen in aff dressed in lifebelts ready for her final plunge, and cheering wildly as it might have been an enthusiastic crowd
when the King passes."

Let us close on that note. We have been compassed about so long and so blinding-ly by wonders and miracles; so overwhelmed by revelations of the spirit of men in the basest and most high, that we have neither time to keep tally of these furious days, nor mind to discern upon which hour of them the world's fate turned:—
Not in the thick of the fight,
Not in the press of the odds,
Do the heroes come to their height
Or we know the demi-gods.

That stands over till peace.
We can only perceive
Men returned from the seas,
Very grateful for leave.

They grant us sudden days,
Snatched from their business of war.
We are too close to appraise
What manner of men they are.

And whether their names go down
With age-kept victories,
Or whether they battle and drown
Unreckoned is hid from our eyes.

They are too near to be great,
But our children shall understand
When and how our fate
Was changed, and by whose hand.

Our children shall measure their worth.
We are content to be blind,
For we know that we walk on a newborn earth
With the saviours of mankind.
